

Talking to Your Doctor About the Equinox Study

Choosing to participate in a clinical research study is an important personal decision. The Equinox Study is a clinical research study that is evaluating an oral investigational medication to see if it may reduce moderate to severe pain associated with endometriosis. If you want to talk to your doctor before deciding to participate in this study, we have provided some additional information below that you can share with him/her. With your permission, the study team at the research site can also keep your doctor updated during your participation in the study. Participating in this research study does not replace seeing your regular doctor for other medical care during the study.

Equinox Study—Information for Physicians

Objective:

- To evaluate an oral investigational medication for the management of moderate to severe endometriosis-associated pain. The oral investigational medication will also be evaluated in combination with concomitant hormonal add-back therapy

Investigational product:

- The oral investigational medication is designed to reduce the amount of estrogen produced in the body without completely blocking it
- Protocol-specific rescue analgesics for endometriosis-associated pain will be allowed during the study period

Study design:

- The first half of the study treatment period (12 months) will be randomized, double-blind, placebo-controlled
- During the second half of the study treatment period (12 months) all study participants will receive active treatment with the oral investigational medication

Study duration:

- Approximately 27 to 50 months (including screening and washout period, if needed)

Additional information:

- All study-related care will be provided to your patient at no charge
- Your patient will continue to see you for her routine, non-study related medical care
- Your patient can withdraw from this research study at any time
- With your patient's permission, the study team may keep you apprised of her progress throughout the study
